BERTHE AND RODOLPHE.

Philadelphia, Pa.

From the French of Alphonse

Karr: One evening the young musical, Rodolphe Armin, and Berthe, the prettiest girl in Mayence, found themselves alone together. Rodolphe and Berthe were engaged, and yet they were going to be separated the next day. Ro-dolphe was to depart for a distant province. For two years he was to take lessons there of an able master; then, on his return, Ber-the's father would resign to him his position of chapel-master, and would give him his daughter.

Berthe said Rodolphe, "I'll be play-music again together, and you like me so much. When we are separated at the close of the day, the hour of grave thoughts, we will play our parts and that will bring us nearer to each other."

Berthe took her harp, Rodolphe accompanied with the flute, and they played Berthe's favorite air several times. When they had finished they wept and kissed; Rodolphe departed.

They were faithful to their promise. Every evening, at the hour when they had seen each other for the last time, Rodolphe took his flute, and they played their parts.

That hour of the evening is solemn and mysterious; it irresistibly inspires a reverie; and the ruddy velours that mount to the horizon one seems to see appear, living and anticipatory, the chamber with its harp, some laughing and crowned with roses, others pale and shrouded in mourning. At that hour, the last quivering of the wind among the leaves seems to modulate the air to which we attach sweet and sad memories; music is the voice of the soul.

Occasionally Rodolphe paused; he seemed to hear the vibrations of Berthe's harp mingled with the sounds of his flute. Two years passed thus.

One evening Berthe was with her father beneath the arbor of their little garden. That arbor was formally by five acacias that interlock-ed their foliage and their white and perfumed flower clusters; between the acacias dark green lilacs filled up the empty space with their abundant leaves; three or four honeysuckles climbed about the arbor, and allowed long, blooming garlands to hang down.

Through the narrow entrance to the arbor a band of purple produced by the reflection of the setting sun, was visible at the horizon.

It was the hour sacred to souvenirs;

Berthe was playing her favorite air upon the harp; and suddenly she stopped to listen.

It was silence; even the wind
